

On another subject, we were talking today about how much influence your efforts must have had on this whole situation. We know the people to whom you gave tips appeared to ignore or evade them at the time. In some cases, I'm sure, much against their own inclinations, but they all have problems of editors and editors have problems with publishers and readers. Nevertheless, we feel sure that your total impact is tremendous and probably critical at many points, providing yet another factor in the total accumulation that led to decisions that were made, and in any case creating a subconscious climate where more questions were asked than otherwise would have been the case. It may well be doubted if we'd be where we are today if you had not tried so hard and so courageously. Best, Edw jdw
